New Values, and the the speakers up in the rafters throb and shake and pulse. doomey gets up from the pilot's chair and he slides across the glass tiles. he lifts a knee, and then he stomps out a wild beat, spins and twirls, his arms raised, his mouth twisted in a crazy grin]

Okay. Pretty sure this is not how a literary magazine is supposed to operate, what with the local slush pile enthusiast going all apeshit on the colored glass tiles in the middle of the workroom...

He's a good man, folks. But, anyway, we are now examining Lisa Clark's submission Strung Abalone. Just wish the desk would stop stop jumping around.

Live It Up exploding from the speakers in the rafters. doomey rights his-badass-self, plants his palms on the cherrywood desktop, and he smiles a Tom Waits smile into the camera that no one else can see] we will now examine JB's The Phoenix. we will, um, lay it out on the desktop and, well, look it over sort of. or whatever.

oh, so fucking satisfying. that first prick.

Oh for Pete's sake. I didn't think anyone was here. Red in the face, peeps.

Isn't it late? I thought it was like four A.M.

okay, that was just not needed, right? might be we need to look into christ's mental health. is there a way we could call in someone to examine the health of Jesus's mental state, DeP?

earth to DeP.

Peacock's the phoenix has gone Portholed.

God christ. I hate telling people they haven't joined the parade. I fucking hate it. I might have to go back to the camps.

Kidding, cousins.
