REJECTION NOTICE

Dear Mr. K,

Sorry. A MAN'S CRIME stalled out in the Terminal. Blame the bull! It's wish washy critique was the only thing that kept it from my eyes. I hope this finds you well and doesn't discourage you from doing business with us again. Here is the link to the terminal discussion of your work.

A FEW HOURS LATER

Hello again sir,

In the spirit of full disclosure, I have to tell you I edited the rejection note I posted on site in the BIG BOARD of CAPITAL GAINS to reflect ambiguity into the statement about Bull's wishy washy critique of AMC as being the ONLY thing that kept it from my eyes. Once I copy and pasted the original rejection onto the site I realized that if Bulldust had of plainly said NO to it, then I would not have read it either. And if it went to a tie break and was ultimately rejected there I would not have read it either, so the original rejection I sent was a false statement on my part. Sorry to burden you after the fact with all this rigmarole but it's the result of a guilty conscience realizing the sloppy work it had recently submitted.

johnVC: Thank you for your consideration.

Is there a period of time I should wait before sending another?

Give it a week and then send away. So, another few days just to allow the floor to clear the decks, as it were. Thank you for asking.

Rocks scratches his oddly shaped head with a his diamond-ring pinky. He's confused. That is to say, more than usual. Bull said yes. Rocks said no. What just happened?

"Leaning toward yes" does not a vote of full confidence mak. It's like trusting John O Brennan when he champions an NSA report on Russian meddling with a vote of moderate confidence. It's equivocation to the 10th power of a muddled infinity. Now. I'm going to hang up the 'phone' and get out of these ridiculous pants!

Good day sir!
